

Real and Fake

Today we chase a glittering show,
And buy what we do not really need.
For empty praise we proudly glow,
While silent wants and hearts still bleed.
We run behind a borrowed shine,
Ignoring health along the way.
True well-being we often decline,
As shallow trends decide our day.
For endless hours on reels we stay,
Lost in a world of passing light.
Yet fail to see the tears that stray,
In eyes that struggle within our sight.
At home, at work, in society too,
The same cold picture stands in view.
We miss the bonds that once we knew,
And lose the care that once was true.
The answer rests in minds still young,
Where seeds of wisdom may be sown.
By teachers' voices values sung,

Can guide the hearts not fully grown.
Before they lose what truth can make,
And drift where empty shadows take,
Teach them to know, for goodness' sake,
The line between the real and fake.
